The Boilermaker

A Shot of Whisk(e)y and a Beer

Oral history suggests that the pairing owes its name to its popularity with the men who built boilers for trains in America. Some say that they would shoot the whiskey and chug the beer while others say they would drop the whiskey into a pint glass and drain the contents. There are as many names and origin stories as there are preferred ways to drink it. We think serving $\frac{2}{3}$ of a pint of lager with 35 ml of Bourbon or Rye to be alternately sipped is a wonderful way to enjoy it.

We've chosen Ex Machina Lager from Mondo Brewing in Battersea to pair with any whiskey - or whisky - on our menu. You will notice as you drink that the beer does not change the flavour of the whiskey, nor does the whiskey change the flavour of the beer. This detail was of primary importance in the selection of the beer. We hope you enjoy.
